THE ASTORS GETTING BUSY AGAIN

Brushing Up the House Preparatory to Social Leadership—Youth Has Both Mother and Step-mother.

When John Jacob Astor went down with the Titanic he left a young wife, who afterwards gave birth to a son. He also left a divorced wife with a son and daughter. Her son had been best man for his father at his second marriage. This son, who received the bulk of the estate (mostly real estate in New York City) has since married. His step-mother, the young widow, has also remarried, and by so doing lost her interest in the huge estate. The following article from the New York World tells of the doings of the family lately:

Painters set to work yesterday on the grille work of the Astor residence, No. 840 Fifth Avenue, after finishing redecorating the interior. Their appearance on the outside was in the nature of an announcement that within another fortnight Vincent Astor and his wife, who was Helen Lumsden Huntington, would take up their abode there.

Mr. and Mrs. Astor will make the house the theatre of more pretentious social activities than any they have attempted during their brief married life, it is said. While they made their home at No. 122 East Seventy-eight Street their entertainments were more often gatherings in the interest of social service than otherwise, but when they have come to Fifth Avenue again they will, it is understood, go in for the affairs that made Vincent Astor's grandmother an arbiter of New York society.

The taking over of the house by Vincent Astor marks the relinquishment by his stepmother, the former Mrs. Madeleine Force Astor, who is now Mrs. William K. Dick, of all her trusted share in the estate of Col. John Jacob Astor. The house was left to her under terms exactly like those under which she was given the income of $5,000,000 while she remained the widow of Col. Astor. When she married Mr. Dick on June 2 last she lost not only the increment of the trust fund by the house.

Lost House By Remarriage.

When Vincent Astor attained his majority, some time after his father died with the sinking of the Titanic, he, too, became one of the trustees of the estate, whose final appraisal fixed its value at $87,216,691, of which $65,603,548 went outright to him. When Mrs. Madeleine Force Astor married William K. Dick, the house passed automatically from her possession. All that the trustees had to do was take formal cognizance of the fact that Mrs. Astor had violated terms of her husband's will. The same thing was true of the income from the trust fund established for Mrs. Astor. The trustees merely ceased paying to her at stated intervals the earnings of this fund.

Mrs. Astor, however, was left outright $100,000 under her husband's will; she received from him in the few months that elapsed between their marriage and his death jewelry worth not less than $225,000, and she was also a party to an antenuptial settlement. The amount of this settlement has never been made known. There are records in the Surrogate's Court, however, which put the value of the real estate included in it at $1,109,821.

The honeymoon of the Dicks has been spent quietly, chiefly at the summer home of the family at Islip, Long Island.

Son Still With Mother.

No change will come in the status of Col. Astor's posthumous son and namesake as a result of his mother's remarriage. He was four years old on August 14th last. His mother will continue to be his guardian until he reaches fourteen. He is making his home with the Dicks and will continue to do so.

The social plans of the Vincent Astors have not been made known. The character of their activities can only be surmised, but there is the liveliest sort of anticipation regarding their taking over of the Fifth Avenue house.

It is said to be a probability that Mrs. John Astor, Vincent Astor's mother, will return to New York this winter to become a dominant factor in social affairs. It is said also to be quite probable that she and her daughter, Miss Muriel, may make their home at No. 840 Fifth Avenue.

Extravagant Americans.

The Charlotte News has compiled the following statistics showing some of the daily expenditures of Americans:

It costs a million a day to run the moving picture shows.

It costs a million a day to keep up the automobile industry.

It costs a million a day to pay the tea, coffee and cocoa accounts.

It costs a million a day to run the schools.

It costs three millions a day to pay the liquor accounts.

It costs seven millions a day to run the steam railroads.

It costs three millions a day to keep the government going.

It costs a million a day to pay interest on deposits in the savings banks.

It costs a million a day to run the churches and the missionary organizations.

It costs fifteen millions a day to run the farms.

It costs a million a day to support the doctors and lawyers.

It costs nearly a million a day to keep up the army and navy in time of peace.

It costs half a million a day to meet the pensions of soldiers and sailors' widows.

It costs a million a day to pay the interest on railroad bonds.

It costs nearly a million a day to take care of the failures and bankruptcies.

It costs six millions a day to pay for the exports from the United States, and four and a half millions a day to pay for the imports.

A few men work too hard and a lot of men rest too much.
